Grave concern over release of suspected pedophiles

The Human Rights Commission of the Maldives issued a press release last month expressing its concern over the increase in reported cases of child abuse as well as the increasing leniency exercised by the courts in releasing suspected pedophiles without fully considering the subsequent impact of their release on the safety and security of the victims and their families.

HRCM refers to Article 49 of the Constitution, which confers on the courts the power to keep suspects in custody if their release may endanger public safety.

HRCM believes Article 49 authorizes the courts to keep suspected pedophiles in custody and called upon the courts to fully consider the provisions of Article 49, and to exercise this power to detain suspected pedophiles in custody during the period of trial.

In addition the Commission also called upon the People's Majlis to expedite an Act on pedophiles and child abusers.

This network also aims to create strong bridges between provincial NGOs by providing a platform for regular communication and discussion of related issues, encourage better coordination and the effective implementation of activities aimed at protecting, sustaining and promoting a high regard for human rights in the country. In addition it aspires to achieve universal access to services provided by HRCM with the assistance of focal points in Island based NGOs, set up provincial NGO connections that would provide logistical and qualitative assistance during monitoring visits by HRCM. Thus it would build a solid foundation of active island based NGOs which would assist in the set up of HRCM provincial offices in the future.
