Message by His Excellency Mr. Mohamed Nasheed
President of the Republic of Maldives
On the Occasion of the 60th Anniversary of the Adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights
10 December 2008

It is so often through loss, that we comprehend the true magnitude of the loss. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights spells out what Humanity should not lose. It reflects the international consensus on the fundamental freedoms and the inalienable rights of humankind. The enduring appeal and importance of the document reminds us all that, despite our differences, all nations, cultures and peoples share certain fundamental values that bind us together into a common humanity. It also reminds us that, to quote the Declaration, "all of us are born free and equal in dignity and rights".

When these simple truths are honoured and valued, a country can grow and develop, in peace and prosperity. When they are ignored or downtrodden, progress is replaced by reaction; peace is replaced by conflict; and hope is replaced by fear.

The aim of the document was and is, to be a practical guideline for how people around the world should live their lives and behave towards one another.

In today's Maldives, the ideals and principles contained in the Universal Declaration have come alive; in our vibrant free media; in our active civil society; in our independent judiciary; in our assertive national Human Rights Commission: in the free, fair and calm presidential elections; and in the smooth transfer of power from the old to the new Governments.

These achievements demonstrate, without any doubt, that the spirit encapsulated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is alive and well in the Maldives. Today, I call on my compatriots and on free peoples everywhere to use this happy anniversary to reflect on the rights and responsibilities bequeathed on all of us, and use the fulfillment and enjoyment of those rights to build a better, fairer and more just society for ourselves and for our children and for all humankind.

It is my firm belief that the practical vision laid down 60 years ago by the drafters of the Declaration, has found practical reality today in the new Maldives that was born on 11th November this year.

Statement of the UN Resident Coordinator in the Maldives – Mr. Patrice Coeur-Bizot on the occasion of Human Rights Day – 10 December 2008

Today as we celebrate Human Rights Day, we also mark the 60th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. With this, the world has cause to celebrate the great achievements made on the road to ensuring fundamental freedoms for everyone.

Today is also the culmination of a global year long human rights campaign which was spearheaded by the UN Secretary General to mark this important milestone. As the Maldives joins in the celebration of these rights and this day, it is a chance to reflect upon the achievements of the country and reaffirm the national commitment to remove all obstacles to the realization of human rights. Moreover to publicly reaffirm that the Universal Declaration and its core values of inherent human dignity, justice, non-discrimination, equality, fairness and universality apply to every Maldivian.

The maintenance of the Declaration and the universality of human rights at the centre of the country's development is significant especially as the country moves forward to consolidate its democracy and address the socio-economic challenges ahead, in order to ensure a better future and life in dignity to which every Maldivian is entitled.

At this critical juncture in the history of the Maldives, it is essential that the Government, Human Rights Commission, civil society, private sector and individuals work together to efficiently protect and promote human rights.

HRCM Addresses the Housing Stress in the Maldives

The Human Rights Commission of the Maldives has released its report on the housing situation titled 'Rapid Assessment of the Housing situation in the Maldives' on 20 November 2008. This report seeks to provide an overview of the scale of the housing problems facing the country, why these have emerged, and most importantly, the possible steps required in overcoming them in a concrete, rights-based manner. The assessment puts forward 18 recommendations, and is aimed to assist the government and all concerned in taking the necessary steps to better the housing problems in the country.

Following a brief introduction, the report contains three main sections. The first examines the right to adequate housing and outlines the precise obligations held by the State to respect, protect and fulfill this right; in conjunction with the various entitlements of individuals that together comprise the right to adequate housing. The next section explores the types and sources of housing stress within the country

The report finds that at the national level, some 12,000 families do not have their own housing and 85% of the households in Malé are either crowding in with other families or living in temporary/makeshift living space.

The 2006 Population and Housing Census indicates that by that year, the average number of people per sleeping room in Male' was 3.1 persons

President of the Commission Mr. Ahmed Saleem believes that this report would be an important contribution on housing that the commission has accomplished to date.

HRCM is committed to pursue this issue by monitoring extent to which the concerned authorities and the government employs recommendation put forth in providing effective remedies to housing situation in the Maldives.

At the end of 2007 from cases reported to the HRCM, those related to housing issues were the third most serious and highest in number.

HRCM holds Human Rights Art Competition

On the occasion of the 60th anniversary of the Universal Declaration, the Human Rights Commission of the Maldives organised an art competition for all school children nationwide. The objective of organizing such an event for students is to create interest and promote the idea of Human rights among the new generation. The 60th anniversary provided a great platform to introduce children to the basics of Human Rights and the relevance of it in our everyday life. The competition was carried out with the support and assistance of Ministry of Education.

The Universal Declaration outlines 30 basic rights essential for all human beings to achieve their full potential and to live a life free of fear and want. To honour these memorable document 5 articles were chosen from the UDHR as topics/themes for the competition. Student's belonging to the age groups under 13, under16 and 19 participated in this competition.

An unprecedented 646 entries from 23 schools were submitted for this competition and more than 245 children from Male' schools participated. The entries received were engaging and innovative, some depicting the stark images of discrimination and others offering more hopeful pictures of unity and the promise of something better. The diversity of artworks enabled us to understand the thoughts and feeling they had about human rights from their perspective.

All entries were shortlisted based on their originality, artistic merit and the creative expression of the chosen article. A panel of independent artists selected the winning entries from the shortlist.

Winners will be announced on 20th December 2008 at the annual celebrations to mark Human Rights Day.
